Feedback on learning

- Quality feedback takes place during the lesson, supports learning, informs teaching, enables teachers to adapt learning during sessions and communicates information to enable children to improve
- Time for reflection, evaluation, feedback, improvement and application is planned into sessions
- Feedback uses success criteria and focuses on clarifying and extending learning. It encourages children to be reflective
- It is not expected that the varied outcomes or written work will be ‘marked’ by the teacher. It will be more usual for teachers to give oral feedback in the lesson, individually or as a group / class, to directly impact on learning and that children will use ‘Collaborative Improvement’

Collaborative Improvement is a key feature of feedback on learning in the classroom.

Collaborative Improvement
- involves children in identifying improvements
- provides good opportunities to make and apply improvements
- develops the skills of editing and drafting
- supports children to recognise
  - what they are doing well and
  - how to improve
- creates reflective, self-aware and independent learners and writers
- raises children’s achievement in writing

Teachers and Teaching Assistants model and use Collaborative Improvement techniques with the whole class or groups of children of all ages, stages and abilities. Collaborative Improvement is supported by Learning Partner agreements and an age appropriate set of success criteria. Strategies embedded from Early Years or Key Stage 1 enable the children to become increasingly confident and independent in a wide range of outcomes.

We create an effective learning environment through, for example

- the active engagement of pupils in learning
- collaborative and pupil led learning
- learning about how we learn
- regular, planned pupil voice opportunities
- use of restorative approaches and corrective language
- learning strategies such as Assessment for Learning and Talk for Learning
- a focus on intrinsic incentives for rewards and sanctions which build self-worth and a ‘growth mindset’
- an appropriate physical and emotional environment
- consistent application of strategies for learning and inclusion

Children are expected to take responsibility for their own behaviour and realise the impact on others. We aim to develop confident, self-disciplined, enthusiastic and self-motivated, independent learners.
